INTEGRATING MARINE & TERRESTRIAL PLANNING

A workshop for planners, developers and interested stakeholders

Date: WEDNESDAY 29 JUNE 2011

Venue: IMPERIAL HOTEL, NORTH DRIVE, GREAT YARMOUTH, NORFOLK, NR30 1EQ

This workshop provides the opportunity to find out more about the new system of Marine Planning which is being developed for England and to discuss with developers and other stakeholders how to ensure effective integration between marine planning and terrestrial planning.

Marine Planning will have a significant impact on how our marine areas are managed – and this includes inland tidal waterways. It will affect coastal communities as well as having economic development and community implications.

Delegates will learn about and discuss:

- ✦ The new system of marine planning
- ✦ Statutory requirements and the interface with the planning system
- ✦ The view of developers on how to ensure effective interface between planning systems
- ✦ What Marine Planning means for Localism
- ✦ Dealing with the coastal interface

This workshop, which will be opened by the RTPI President, Richard Summers, is designed not only for the coastal planning practitioner but also those professionals whose interests interface with tidal estuaries and inland tidal waters. It will bring together planners, developers and stakeholders to identify and discuss key integration issues.

It will be a good CPD opportunity for planning professionals from inland localities who wish to find out more about different aspects of the planning system. It will include strong representation from developers and other private sector marine users as well as a range of other stakeholders.

INTEGRATING MARINE & TERRESTRIAL PLANNING

A workshop for planners, developers and interested stakeholders

Rationale

From April 2011, a new system of marine planning is being developed in England. Marine Planning will have a significant impact on how our marine areas are managed – this is expected to affect, enable and support economic development, coastal communities and protect the marine environment. The first two marine plan areas include the East of England.

Marine planning on this scale is new in the UK and, to a large extent, a World first. Critical to the success of marine planning will be to ensure effective integration between the new marine planning system and the existing terrestrial planning system. This is an issue for all stakeholders, particularly commercial developers who will have to navigate both systems and for marine and terrestrial planners who will need to develop an integrated approach. This workshop will bring together these three stakeholder groups, and other stakeholders with an interest, to discuss some of the challenges and issues of integration and co-ordination in the East marine plan areas and to suggest potential ways of working together to develop solutions.

Objectives

- ◆ Raise awareness of marine planning amongst key stakeholders in the East Inshore and East Offshore Marine Plan areas.
- ◆ Identify issues and approaches to ensure effective integration between the terrestrial and marine planning systems.
- ◆ Encourage early dialogue between key commercial developers, marine planners and terrestrial planners and identify priority issues to address.

Target Audience

- ◆ All key local planning authority leads
- ◆ Key commercial developers, including off-shore wind and energy, fishing interests, cabling and ports.
- ◆ Relevant Statutory Consultees
- ◆ Other interested stakeholders.
