Delivering the Welsh Planning Research Agenda

Seminar

Wednesday 24th February 2010

9.30 for 10am — 4pm

The Parc Hotel, Cardiff

RTPI Cymru and the RTPI Planning Education and Research Network (PERN) bring to you a free one day seminar to discuss the research agenda to support planning policy in Wales.

The implementation of planning reforms, the acceptance of climate change as a core driver of government policy and new planning procedures and practice have radically changed the operational and policy context of the Welsh planning system.

This seminar aims to bring together research and practice interests to identify the main tasks that lie ahead for Welsh policy, identify priority topics for research attention, and consider how to disseminate research findings to inform Welsh planning practice most effectively.

The seminar will hear from research experiences which have a relevance to Wales, either by using case studies or evidence from Wales or research which could be applied to Wales.

The day will also include a discussion session to consider the capacity to deliver the research agenda to support Welsh planning policy, any gaps in evidence, and discuss future opportunities.

Who Should attend?

The seminar will be of interest to researchers and practitioners, from across the UK, with an interest in the research agenda supporting the development of planning policy and practice in Wales.
